TORONTO, June 27 – Nominations are invited for the new 3M Health Leadership Award presented by Health Nexus. The annual award will celebrate an individual who has demonstrated outstanding community leadership leading to the improved health of local residents.

“We are excited to have the opportunity to demonstrate how one individual can inspire a community to work together to improve their health and their quality of life,” said Executive Director of Health Nexus, Barb Willet. “Because of our organization’s broad approach to health, we are looking forward to a variety of nominations.”

Presented in conjunction with 3M’s Healthy Communities Program, the award is geared to those working outside the formal health care sector who have not been previously recognized on a national level.

“With their extensive networks across Ontario and Canada combined with over 25 years of experience with supporting public and community health providers, Health Nexus was a natural fit as partner for this award,” said Patrick Small, Manager of Community Relations at 3M Canada.

The 3M Health Leadership Award links grass-roots community leadership with a growing movement towards the integration of the social determinants of health in program planning which ultimately encourages changes to current the public health policy. The new award will highlight the work that is being done to improve the health of Canadians through addressing social concerns such as housing, income, education, food security and inclusion.

Nominations are being accepted as of June 27th until September 15th, 2011. Nominations can be submitted electronically through the award’s website or by mail and fax.

The recipient of the award will be honoured during an afternoon symposium on community health leadership held on December 5th, 2011 in Toronto.
